The Prime Minister, Mr. Wilson, denied at a news conference on his return to London from his talks with President Johnson, that there had been coolness over Britain's dissociation from America's bombing of targets in the Hanoi - Haiphong area of North Vietnam. The President had known that Britain would dissociate herself from any escalation of the war, and fully understood the British Government's position. Asked about American reaction to the measures designed to put Britain's economy right, Mr. Wilson said that the President fully supported these, and was impressed by Britain's determination and resolve. About the proposed reduction in expenditure on Far East defence, Mr. Wilson emphasised that there was no change in Britain's defence policy, but she had to save foreign exchange costs and that meant getting full value for the money spent abroad on defence.

Draft legislation to give the British Government powers to enforce the wages and prices freeze has now been published in the form of amendments to the existing Prices and Incomes Bill. Under the proposed legislation, breaches of the stand-still would bring fines of up to £500. The BBC Political correspondent says the Bill is expected to become law on August 12th. The Government, however, intends to rely in the first instance on voluntary co-operation over the freeze. The correspondent says the opposition in Parliament is expected to be highly critical of the proposed amendments. They claim that they change the whole character of the Bill, now going through Parliament, and give the Economics Minister, Mr. Brown, dictatorial powers. *****

American Heavy Bombers, from Guam Island in the Pacific, have for the first time attacked targets in the de-militarised zone between North and South Vietnam. An American spokesman in Saigon says that the raid was carried out because North Vietnamese troops have been using the zone for crossing into the South. The main targets were an Ammunition Dump, a Supply Area, and Anti-aircraft positions. The spokesman described the area as a major base camp, and said the heavy ground fire encountered by the bombers indicates that it was occupied.

Indonesia is to send a peace mission to Malaysia shortly. This was announced after a special meeting of the so-called "Crash Malaysia Command" presided over by President Sukarno. A government spokesman said the decision is based on the awareness of the importance of peace and stability for the benefit of both countries. Earlier the Malaysian Prime Minister Tunku Abdul Rahman said President Sukarno's recent statement that Indonesia's confrontation with Malaysia had not ended should be ignored. Malaysia, he said, still trusted the undertaking given by the Indonesians during the Bangkok talks.

In Nigeria, the military government is reported to have begun talks with leaders of the Army rebels who mutinied yesterday. According to reports, the talks are about the formation of a new administration, and the avoidance of further fighting. There is little news coming out of Nigeria, and nothing more has been heard of the head of the military government, who yesterday was reported to have been detained by the rebels. A broadcast by Lagos Radio early this morning quoted the armed forces Chief of Staff as saying that the mutiny had been put down. Lagos Airport, which was taken over by rebels yesterday, is reported to be still closed.

In South Africa, the Department of Bantu Education has agreed in principle to a proposal that because of the shortage of engineers, Africans should be admitted to engineering courses at white universities, but it says the arrangement should stop when African colleges can meet the demand for this training. The South African government is expected to approve the arrangement, which Africans believe will open a whole new range of careers to them.
